Old Inverlochy Castle is about 1½ miles north east of Fort William overlooking Loch Linnhe and Loch Eil. Although in ruins it is an impressive and majestic pile. With its strong round towers at each corner and massive walls it gives the impression of great strength. It was once in the occupation of the Comyn family and tradition says it was formerly the site of a Pictish town connected with a mythical king Achaius about A. D. 790.

With its strong round towers at each corner and massive walls, it gives the impression of great strength. It was once the residence of the Comyn family and tradition says it was formerly the site of a Pictish town connected with Inchtuthil, Forfarshire. Agricola built a camp here A.D. 79 and Ptolemy the geographer mentions Alatus about A. D. 140.
